Richard Bates, 10, reads to Calai, a Labrador-golden retriever mix, at the Orangevale Library.

Dogs' trick: Help kids read

By Lakesha McGhee
MEETUP WRITER

In a nook at the Orangevale Library, 4-year-old Amanda Schaffner is learning to read. She flips through pages, identifying letters of the alphabet, numbers and a few words.

With the help of her new friend Sal, she doesn't become restless or lose interest.

"I like reading to him because he's cute," explained Amanda after her 30-minute session.

Sal isn't a librarian or even a preschool buddy. He's a 2-year-old Labrador-golden retriever mix with a very important job.

The Orangevale Library and Orangevale Rotary Club have joined forces to bring local youngsters a nationwide program that aims to improve children's reading skills and confidence by using trained service dogs.

According to library officials, studies show that children who are able to read aloud to an adult will enjoy reading to a friendly, nonjudgmental animal. Intermountain Therapy Animals - which launched the reading program five years ago in Salt Lake City - found the act can relax children, boost their self-confidence and ultimately improve their reading scores.

The program is titled R.E.A.D., which stands for Reading Education Assistance Dogs, and includes about 50 partners.

"We have a long waiting list for children who are not readers yet," said Coral Procter, Orangevale Library branch manager.

The program was launched locally about a month ago when Rotary Club members brought the idea to the library. Joan Buntin, whose husband is a club member, had completed a course on the program and wanted to use her golden retriever Delilah in it.

Delilah is a certified service dog at Sunrise Assisted Living at Fair Oaks, but Buntin said the 7-year-old needed slower-paced tasks after recently undergoing cancer treatment.

"The children like to pet the dogs as they read," Buntin said. "It's a calming environment, and the children don't have to worry about the dog correcting them if they get something wrong."

The Orangevale Library has three certified service dogs that participate in the program, held from 1 to 5 p.m. Wednesdays. Parents are required to make an appointment for their child's participation.

To make an appointment for children to read with a trained service dog, call (916) 986-2080.

ness of creating viable, unified school districts that will serve all of our students, whether they're black, brown or white."

State Sen. Deborah Ortiz, D-Sacramento, who said in a letter to the county committee that "I continue to strongly support the reorganization," also assured classified workers in the Grant district and five elementary districts involved in the plan that they wouldn't lose their jobs because of reorganization.

"School employees have statutory protections that allow them to retain their employment, seniority, leaves and benefits should reorganization occur," Ortiz said in the letter read to the committee by Kelly Patterson, district representative for the state senator.

Committee members also decided against taking any immediate action on a resolution passed by the Grant board Aug. 20 to unify all the districts into a single entity.

"There will be time in the future we can consider the Grant petition," said committee member Brian Cooley.

"We do support unification," Jason Sample, president of the Grant school board, said. But, he said, there should be one unified district, not two as the Families for Better Education plan would create.

Linda Fowler, chairwoman of Families for Better Education, said the unification debate has been going on for 40 years. She said plans to unify north county districts into one have been turned down six times.

"It would be defeated one more time," Fowler said, if the Grant proposal for just one unified district were to go to the voters.
